THE TEACHER SHEPHERDING THE FLOCK By RALPH WELLS THE TEACHER SHEPHERDING THE FLOCK OW few of us appreciate the influence of the heart upon the head! If the heart is averse, how slow the mind is to understand or receive a truth! Young people are apt to look on the race of teachers as their natural foes. Who has failed to notice the skill of a certain lawyer in examining witnesses, in his first creating a pleasant impression on their minds, gaining their confidence and good will? Especially is this a necessity when attendance is voluntary, and the teacher depends for his success largely on the affection of his pupil;- then the theme becomes delightful for the love the pupil bears the presenter. If my scholar loves me he will generally follow me. What can be more conducive to such a relation than...
