The story you sent us a few days since (What Happened in My Studio) is unavailable chiefly on account of its length, and it is returned to your address by this mail. Your supposition in regard to the rejection of your own stories is entirely correct. I meant to say, if I did not, this very thing in my letter returning them. I am sure you will not construe anything I have written as evincing any inestimate (sic) of the courtesy which prompted your proposal to send us stories from other authors. Messrs. Harper Brothers desire me to express to you their hearty appreciation of your friendly interest in their behalf. With regard to your new novel, The Best...
